Developing Your Self-Assessment

This assignment will serve as the basis for the final "Career" assignment that is due near the end of the course.

- Take the MBTI and learning styles quizzes (found on the Learn@UW course) and identify specific characteristics you may possess. Use the characteristics sheet (below) to record your findings.
- List experiences from your past that recall positive memories for you.
  - These are things that you are proud of; things that make you feel energized as you recall them. They can be anything from building a house to drawing a picture or running a race. It only matters that you felt good about doing it. The standard to use in choosing items for this list is that fact that you felt, "This was a really good thing!"
  - Share your experiences with others and ask them to listen and identify characteristics, values, skills and goals that they hear within the stories. Record their findings on the worksheet as well.

Review the worksheet to identify the most commonly listed characteristics. Using this worksheet, create a final listing of 5-10 personal characteristics.

Thoughtfully consider the stories you wrote and use them to identify the values and that you believe accurately represent who you are as a person. Consider your characteristics and values you've identified and determine 3-5 contributions you would like to make to society

Combine the two sections into one document and submit it to the dropbox entitled self-assessment. Submit the characteristics chart as well as your lists.
